Child Passenger Safety Seat Information

2 0 0 3

No excuse will bring them back. Secure children properly every time they ride in a car.

Most crashes occur near home and can be violent, even at lower speeds. When used correctly, child safety seats can prevent injuries and save lives.

Children 12 and under should ride properly restrained in the back seat:

- Infants should ride in rear-facing safety seats as long as possible; at least until they are 12 months old and weigh at least 20 pounds. Never place a rear facing infant seat in the front seat when a passenger air bag is present.
- Kids over one year old who weigh 20-40 pounds and can no longer ride rear-facing should ride in forward-facing child safety seats.
- Kids over 40 pounds are encouraged to use booster seats until the lap and shoulder belts fit correctly (around age 8).
- Once safety belts fit children correctly (usually around 8), the lap and shoulder belts should be used.

All child safety seats must be installed and used according to the manufacturer's instructions and the vehicle owner's manual to properly protect children.
